Rudy Giuliani says President Donald Trump's legal battle will go on despite the Supreme Court rejecting a bid Friday from Texas' attorney general to block the ballots of millions of voters in battleground states that went in favor of Joe Biden.

"The case wasn't rejected on the merits, the case was rejected on standing," Giuliani said Friday during an appearance on Newsmax TV's "Stinchfield."

"The answer to that is to bring the case now in the district court by the president, by some of the electors, alleging the same facts where there would be standing and therefore get a hearing."

The court's order was issued with no public dissents. The Electoral College will convene Monday to affirm Biden's win.

"The worst part of this is, basically the courts are saying they want to stay out of this, and they don't want to give us a hearing and they don't want the American people to hear these facts.," said Giuliani.

"That's a terrible, terrible mistake. These facts will remain an open sore in our history unless they don't get resolved. They need to be heard, they need to be aired and somebody needs to make a decision on whether they're true or false and some court's going to have the courage to make that decision."

The lawsuit, brought by Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton, sought to sue Pennsylvania, Georgia, Wisconsin and Michigan and invalidate their election results. The Supreme Court said Texas had not demonstrated "a judicially cognizable interest in the manner in which another State conducts its elections."
